APPEALS COURT UPHOLDS SUSPENSION OF BAN

A U.S. federal appeals court on Thursday unanimously upheld a temporary suspension of President Donald Trump's order that restricted travel from seven Muslim-majority countries. The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling came in a challenge to Trump's order filed by the states of Washington and Minnesota. The U.S. Supreme Court will likely determine the case's final outcome. See pages 10-11 for more

TRUMP DENOUNCES NUCLEAR TREATY

In his first call as president with Russian leader Vladimir Putin, Donald Trump denounced a treaty that caps U.S. and Russian deployment of nuclear warheads as a bad deal for the United States, according to two U.S. officials and one former U.S. official with knowledge of the call. When Putin raised the possibility of extending the 2010 treaty, known as New START, Trump paused to ask his aides in an aside what the treaty was, these sources said. Trump then told Putin the treaty was one of several bad deals negotiated by the Obama administration, saying that New START favored Russia. Trump also talked about his own popularity, the sources said. REUTERS

CONWAY DRAWS ETHICS COMPLAINTS

Senior White House adviser Kellyanne Conway drew sharp criticism and complaints on Thursday over the ethics of using her position to promote the clothing line of President Donald Trump's daughter Ivanka, one day after Trump attacked a retailer for dropping it. Federal ethics rules prohibit executive branch employees from using their positions to endorse products or for the private gain of friends. "Go buy Ivanka's stuff. ... I'm going to go get some myself today," Conway told Fox News in an interview from the White House. "I'm going to give a free commercial here: Go buy it today, everybody."

TWITTER ADVERTISING REVENUE FALLS

4 Twitter Inc. posted the slowest revenue growth since it went public four years ago, sending shares down more than 10 percent on fears that rivals Snapchat and Facebook Inc. were winning the war for advertising. Revenue from advertising fell from a year ago and a 4.0 percent year-on-year rise in users to 319 million fell short of Wall Street forecasts as well. The election of prolific tweeter Donald Trump as U.S. president failed to produce a "Trump bump" in Twitter's results, and Twitter declined to give guidance on future revenue with Chief Executive Jack Dorsey asking for patience. The microblogging service has struggled to find a formula that will attract a new crop of users or advertisers even as rivals have ridden a wave of rising investment in internet advertising. REUTERS

Critics seek Planned Parenthood's defunding

Protesters will gather Saturday at the Northeast Philly health clinic.

ALEXIS SACHDEV
alexis.sachdev@metro.us

While a controversial bill that would ban abortions after 20 weeks moves through the Senate to the House this week, a bevy of protesters will gather outside a Northeast Philadelphia Planned Parenthood this weekend, calling for the nonprofit to be stripped of its federal funding.

A rally at the Far Northeast Surgical Center off Roosevelt Boulevard is among more than 200 nationwide protests planned for Saturday, coordinated by #DefundPP, a coalition of anti-abortion groups that seek to defund the nonprofit sexual health organization and reallocate funding toward health centers that don't perform abortions, but still offer a range of services.

> "We pray that there will be a day that there won't need to be 3,000 abortions."
> Aaron Gannon

Aaron Gannon, who is organizing the event, said he and other anti-abortion demonstrators would like to stop the flow of their tax dollars to Planned Parenthood, despite the fact that abortion accounts for only a small number of its services in a given year.

"We pray that there will be a day that there won't need to be 3,000 abortions," Gannon said, referring to a reported number of abortions the Comely Road Planned Parenthood performed in 2015. "We pray that it be 2,000, then 1,000, and then people will feel supported and have the health they need but there wouldn't need to be a Planned Parenthood in Philadelphia."

Abortion procedures accounted for just shy of 324,000 of the more than 9.4 million services — including breast exams, contraceptives, STI/STD tests, female sterilization and vasectomies, adoption referrals and HIV and HPV testing — it provided in 2015.

When asked if he would be OK with Planned Parenthood continuing to receive federal dollars — which legally cannot cover the costs of abortion per the Hyde Amendment — if they ceased abortion services, Gannon said he would like to see the 650 Planned Parenthood clinics around the country "expand their services to be more holistic."

"It's not that the goal is to make it so there's no access and availability," the social worker continued, "but the goal is that change of heart and have people understand so they will think of abortion as unthinkable."

Presently, abortions are only permitted in Pennsylvania up to 24 weeks, unless the woman's life or health is endangered. Senate Bill 3, which passed through the Pennsylvania General Assembly Wednesday, would restrict that period to 20 weeks, citing studies that allege fetuses can begin to feel pain at that time.

The bill will also make illegal a method of abortion called "dilation and evacuation," which is considered one of the safest methods for second trimester abortions. Doctors administering it would also be penalized.

Philly declares a snow emergency but only a few inches dust the ground

Officials defended their decision to close schools and issue the emergency, saying they didn't overreact.

SAM NEWHOUSE

After last night's storm, only a few inches of snow fell with even less sticking to the ground. CHARLES MOSTOLLER

Philadelphia declared a snow emergency and closed schools Thursday for what turned out to be just a few inches of snow that fell on Philadelphia.

"The inches didn't materialize, unfortunately or fortunately, depending on how you look at it," Philadelphia Office of Emergency Management Executive Director Samantha Phillips said Thursday afternoon. "We didn't overreact. We prepare and respond based on the forecast that's provided to us."

About 2 inches of snow fell in Center City, with 3 to 4 inches in other parts of Philly.

That was significantly lower than previous forecasts by the National Weather Service. Six to 8 inches was forecast on Wednesday night, with 5 to 6 still expected as of 5 a.m. Thursday. New York City, which did close its public schools Thursday, got up to 14 inches of snow in places. Boston also shut down the schools for the day, and snow totals there reached up to 18 inches in places.

Municipal offices in Philly remained open Thursday. Although by early afternoon many streets in Center City were clear, there were few cars or pedestrians to be seen as many people took advantage of the snow day.

"Based on the facts, I think we made the right call," Phillips said. "It never hurts to prepare and put the equipment out there."

The city did marshal significant resources from the Streets Department to cope with the snow that did fall Wednesday night. Approximately 410 pieces of equipment and 800 employees worked on snow operations, and nearly 8,000 tons of salt was used, according to the city.

Crews began salting streets at 6 a.m. Thursday, and plowing at 9 a.m.

That response may have lessened the impact of the storm, officials said. The Streets Department said 75 percent of all primary and secondary streets and 30 percent of residential streets were serviced by noon.

"City operations were very smooth this morning," the city said in a statement Thursday on the snow response. "There was lower than normal call volume at both Police 911 and Fire Communications Center and no major incidents."

A wind advisory remained in effect in the region and motorists were advised to look out for black ice after the storm.

$227M settlement in building collapse is city's biggest ever

The longest civil trial in Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas history ended this week with the largest settlement in state history being awarded to the victims of the 2013 Salvation Army building collapse in Center City.

The $227 million settlement for victims of the June 5, 2013, building collapse at 22nd and Market streets was announced Wednesday after a jury found all defendants in a civil trial responsible for the collapse, which killed seven and severely injured a dozen more.

"They were crushed to death in a Third-World style disaster that made international news," is how the collapse has been described by former City Treasurer Nancy Winkler, whose 24-year-old daughter, Anne Bryan, was among those killed in the disaster.

The Salvation Army and developer Richard Basciano, who had ordered the demolition of a former sandwich shop next to the thrift store, are expected to pay the bulk of the settlement funds — $200 million from Salvation Army, the rest from Basciano, according to the Inquirer.

The scene of the June 5, 2013 building collapse at 22nd and Market streets.

Also found responsible for the collapse were architect Plato Marinakos, demolition contractor Griffin Campbell, who was sentenced to 15 to 30 years for involuntary manslaughter, and backhoe operator Sean Benschop, who received 7½ to 15 years for pleading guilty to the same charges.

The collapse occurred when a free-standing wall from the adjacent demolition site fell onto the Salvation Army, with staff and customers inside.

The settlement funds will be divided among the victims and their families.

Mariya Plekan, who survived the collapse but who had the bottom half of her body severed, is "almost certain to receive the largest portion of the settlement," the Inquirer reported. Plekan, a Ukrainian immigrant who was 52 when she was trapped under the rubble for 13 hours, is expected to require medical care for the remainder of her life.

The NAACP Philadelphia chapter has called for Campbell to receive a new trial now that the civil trial has concluded.

US appeals court upholds

Trump had said the order was vital for national safety and criticized Robart, the Seattle judge, for suspending it.

A federal appellate court on Thursday unanimously upheld a temporary suspension of President Donald Trump's order that restricted travel from seven Muslim-majority countries.

The 9th Circuit Court of Appeals ruling came in a challenge to Trump's order filed by the states of Washington and Minnesota.

The White House had no immediate comment about the ruling or whether an appeal will be made to the Supreme Court.

Trump's Jan. 27 executive order barred entry for citizens from Iran, Iraq, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, Syria and Yemen for 90 days and imposed a 120-day halt on all refugees, except refugees from Syria who are barred indefinitely.

District Judge James Robart suspended Trump's order last Friday.

The ruling from the 9th Circuit, which follows a hearing on the case on Tuesday, does not resolve the lawsuit, but relates instead to whether Trump's order should be suspended while litigation proceeds.

Two members of three-judge panel that ruled were appointed by former Democratic Presidents Jimmy Carter and Barack Obama, and one was appointed by former President George W. Bush.

Either side could decide to appeal directly to the Supreme Court.

Critics have called Trump's ban discriminatory against Muslims and have questioned its value as a security measure. National security veterans, major technology companies and law enforcement officials from more than a dozen states backed a legal effort against the ban.

Ultimately the courts will have to address questions about the extent of the president's power on matters of immigration and national security. Traditionally, judges have been extremely cautious about stepping on the suspension of Trump ban

"I actually can't believe that we're having to fight to protect the security, in a court system, to protect the security of our nation."

Trump, speaking at an event with sheriffs on Tuesday executive branch's authority in such matters, legal experts say, though some note that the implementation of this order presents unique issues.

The appeals court panel subjected Trump's order to intense scrutiny during Tuesday's oral argument.

During the oral argument, the judges asked a government lawyer whether the Trump administration's national security argument was backed by evidence that people from the seven countries posed a danger.

Judge Richard Clifton posed equally tough questions for an attorney representing Minnesota and Washington. Clifton asked if Robart's suspension of Trump's policy was "overboard." Clifton is an appointee of former President George W. Bush, a Republican like Trump.

August Flentje, representing the Trump administration as special counsel for the Justice Department, told the panel on Tuesday that "Congress has expressly authorized the president to suspend entry of categories of aliens" for national security reasons.

"That's what the president did here," he said.

When the 9th Circuit asked Flentje what evidence the executive order had used to connect the seven countries affected by the order with terrorism in the United States, Flentje said the "proceedings have been moving very fast," without giving specific examples.

He said both Congress and the previous administration of Democrat Barack Obama had determined that those seven countries posed the greatest risk of terrorism and had in the past put stricter visa requirements on them.

Noah Purcell, solicitor general for the state of Washington, began his argument urging the court to serve "as a check on executive abuses."

Curbing entry to the United States as a national security measure was a central premise of Trump's 2016 presidential campaign, originally proposed as a temporary ban on all Muslims. He has voiced frustration at the legal challenge to his order.

Presidents have in the past claimed sweeping powers to fight terrorism, but individuals, states and civil rights groups challenging the ban said his administration had offered no evidence it answered a threat. REUTERS

Once more, Dakota Johnson's Ana and Jamie Dornan's Christian don't quite get hot and heavy, in "Fifty Shades Darker."

10 Things women want, according to 'Fifty Shades Darker'

If Christian Grey is the ideal man, the species is in a lot of trouble.

letters@metro.us

Whip out those whips and chains. This weekend marks the premiere of "Fifty Shades Darker," the second film in a trilogy on track to inadvertently become one of the best comedies of our modern times (it is accidentally very hilarious). It's a movie about a whole lot of things: possession, obsession, douchebag bosses and, for some reason, Rita Ora. "Fifty Shades Darker" doesn't tell much of a story, but it does drop a world of knowledge on you.

What I'm saying is, you could learn a lot from this film. Before, I thought I knew what women wanted, as I considered myself a woman with wants, hopes and desires. But I was wrong. "Fifty Shades Darker" taught me anew. Read on to see what a strong, progressive, educated woman is apparently looking for.

A dude who thinks that he owns you

Christian Grey, jerk billionaire with a kinky side, is always strutting around talking about, "You're mine." When another dude talks to his love interest, aspiring publisher Anastasia Steele, he's all, "He wants what's mine." Ana never corrects him. Because who has the time to be their own person anyway?

A lover that hacks your bank account

Christian calls his secretary and demands she put a large sum of money in Ana's account. Ana asks how he has her bank information, but he never answers. All women want someone who knows all their private, sensitive information. Bonus points if he can recite your Social Security number by heart.

A rich b-hole

The film never lets you forget: Christian is rich AF. He's a billionaire. He has his own helicopter. He makes $24,000 every 15 minutes. I mean, I don't know if the math on that is right, but I do know that the thrilling combination of rich, conceited and absolutely clueless is like catnip for us ladies.

A boyfriend who tracks your every move

An outsider might think that finding out that your boyfriend has a dossier on your comings and goings is creepy. But is it creepy to pay a photographer to follow a person you love? Maybe he just wants some nice pictures of you struggling to carry your groceries. Real women know it's just a cool way of him showing he cares.

A special someone who doesn't know what birthdays are Literal words out of Christian's mouth: "They do this every year." There's something about a man who doesn't understand the concept of aging that warms the cockles of a woman's heart.

A guy who lives on the edge

At some point, Sir McBroods-A-Lot crashes his helicopter in Portland. Somehow, he gets home relatively unscathed, with just a gentle dusting of dirt on his cheekbones. That's because ladies want a man who is at least half-robot and can't actually get hurt. Human men, who needs 'em?

At least Dakota Johnson looked great at the European premiere! GETTY IMAGES

A beau with deep-seated mommy issues

He's a sadist because he's mad at his mom for dying from an overdose when he was 4. It's why he takes out his issues on white ladies with brown hair. What a dreamboat!

A sweetie who has a pommel horse in his personal gymnasium

Everyone knows gymnastics are the best part of the Olympics. Hello, Final Five! So naturally, women want a man who works out to the sweet sounds of The Police's greatest hits and doesn't break a sweat when practicing his gymnastic routine for an audience of one.

A honey who appreciates cult classics

Christian has a poster for the long forgotten movie, "Chronicles of Riddick" on his wall. Nobody knows why, but it's probably because he thinks has really excellent taste in movies, which is false. Ladies love that!

A guy who only gets down with his pants on

This one is important, and I'll be straight with you — for a movie that's supposedly so scandalous, these two have very vanilla relations. I'm talking missionary sex on a regular ol' bed. And Christian rarely manages to take his pants off, at all. Because during sexy times, all a woman wants is to feel scratchy polyester grazing against her skin.

Don't expect 'Girls' to get their s— together

"I think you're genetically built to be narcissistic in your 20s."

KATE MOONEY

Love it or hate it, since its start in 2012, HBO's "Girls" has prompted endless conversations about body image, feminism, privilege, millennials, Brooklyn, gentrification — the list goes on. As its final season kicks off on Sunday, Feb. 12, we sat down with executive producers Judd Apatow and Jenni Konner to talk about female friendship (especially the Jessa betrayal), narcissism in your 20s and how "Girls" has changed television.

What do the think the 'Girls' legacy will be?
Jenni Konner: I think it was that women were able to tell honest stories about themselves and be more comfortable with their bodies. There's a long tradition of shows about men who do bad things, but we like them anyway. "Girls" is really one of those shows.

Judd Apatow: [Now there are] more female showrunners and auteurs. Mindy Kaling, Tina Fey, Amy Poehler, Amy Schumer; it's growing, but even ten years ago, there wasn't a [female] equivalent to Larry David.

What does the show say about female friendship? The relationships are constantly shifting.
Konner: That's the central question of the show. We've always wondered if these people who were just thrown together by circumstance will stay good friends. As we get older, things change. Especially with the Jessa betrayal.
Apatow: I always find that issue funny because I think that is very specific to women: this idea that anybody I've dated, nobody is allowed to come near them even if I'm done with them.

Konner: But what about the bro code? [Laughs] I would say this was a bigger betrayal: this was the love of Hannah's life and her best friend. I actually had a hard time with the idea of the story. I resisted. [But] it just always felt like it was going that way. You have these two people [Adam and Jessa] who are so explosive and so impulsive.

Apatow: And the actors [Jemima Kirke, Adam Driver], they have such electricity.

The privileged brats we started with are nearing 30; have they changed?
Konner: They're still fairly selfish, but I do think they're getting less narcissistic and more grown up. It's very incremental; there's no version of "Girls" where it ends with them all with their shit together. That's just not our show.

Apatow: That's what the last season is about: How much do they evolve?

Do you actually like any of them?
Konner: I love them all, and I actually felt like they were the most truthful characters I'd seen since probably "Undeclared." When I was in my 20s [in New York] I was a temp who wouldn't even do the work and thought that I deserved better. [Laughs]

Apatow: I think you're genetically built to be narcissistic in your 20s.

You're trying to get a job, you're trying to meet someone to spend your life with. It's all you, you, you, just trying to get your world built. And hopefully at some point, whatever you want it to be, it happens and then you calm down a little bit. (I say this as an old man).

Any favorite episodes?
Apatow: I like the Beach House episode [Season 3, Episode 7] where they really have it out. Andrew Rannells and Danny Strong were so funny.

Konner: Plus, just doing a dance sequence was really fun. [Laughs]

What do you hope viewers will take away from the show?
Apatow: I hope it inspires people to want to write. For women to run their own shows and be directors. I see my daughters and how inspired they are by Lena and Jenni.

Konner: Lena and I had a meeting once with a writer and she said, "Since I started watching 'Girls' I'm comfortable enough to have sex on top." [Laughs] And that actually really moved me.

Apatow: Wait, women get on top? [Laughs]

Konner: I'm not sure I want that to be the legacy, but I do think Lena has been so amazing for body positivity. I feel really, really proud of that.

"A lovely and illuminating surprise, as the best gifts should be!"

Kelly Doty of 'Ink Masters' to draw attention at Tattoo Arts Convention

Kelly Doty, one of the finalists in last season's "Ink Masters," has seen her life rapidly changing the past year. An artist since middle school, she'll be soon celebrating one year of owning her tattoo shop in Salem, Massachusetts, and this weekend, you can find her at Philly's 19th annual Tattoo Arts Convention. Along the way, Doty's learned that when women come together, their power is even more significant and pronounced.

Kelly Doty will be attending the Tattoo Arts Convention this weekend. PROVIDED

One of the remarkable things about the most recent season of "Ink Masters" was the predominantly female slate of tattoo artists. Male contestants had long dominated the show, but Season 8 saw Doty competing alongside the likes of Nikki Simpson, Philadelphia native Gia Rose and winner Ryan Ashley Malarkey (all of whom will be in attendance at the convention as well).

Malarkey's victory was historic, as she was the first woman to win the series. Doty was right there at the top, qualifying as a finalist, and the victory for both women could be seen as a collective win for all female tattoo artists.

Doty spoke highly of her fellow women competitors. "There were so many people that were really good human beings and really good artists. I was expecting it to be more cutthroat, but it wasn't," Doty admits. "I got to work with them and found out that they're awesome people who are like-minded and have the same goals. Women don't have to tear each other down in order to achieve."

While Doty considers herself lucky to have found success despite the traditional gender skewing in her industry, she notes the road wasn't always so easy.

"I've been fortunate that I've had a vast majority of positive experiences," Doty says. "At the same time, I can't deny that I've had experiences where the fact that I was a woman came before my talent."

For aspiring female artists of any kind, Doty has advice: "Be ready to work your butt off. If you do it right, that's going to be what life is like for the rest of your career. Become obsessed and have a romantic relationship with [your art]. Be prepared to work twice as much as men."

The Philadelphia Tattoo Arts Convention's roster features many other female tattoo artists, including "Ink Masters" alums Ashley Velazquez, Duffy Fortner, Katie McGowan, Marisa LaRen, Alli Baker and more.

The convention arrives Feb. 10-12 at the Pennsylvania Convention Center. Find out more at villainarts.com.

76ers remaining patient with Simmons, Embiid — but they won't for much longer

Will this team ever get its starters healthy?

ANDY JASNER
@AndyJasner
sports@metro.us

Over the last three seasons, visiting jerseys popped up everywhere in the Wells Fargo Center.

LeBron. Durant. Westbrook. Curry.

Finally, after 47 wins and a whole lot of suffering, Sixers jerseys began to appear this season — most notably, Joel Embiid and Ben Simmons. If the Sixers are going to take the next step, this duo will be the ones carrying the franchise.

Embiid sat out his seventh straight game — a 111-103 loss to the San Antonio Spurs — and Simmons continues to miss action as he recovers from a fracture in his foot.

The Sixers fell to 18-34 after the Spurs' loss, their fifth in a row. Barring a miraculous finish, they're not going to the playoffs.

At some point, however, it's imperative for the franchise to feature Embiid and Simmons together. It will provide another glimpse of hope. It will provide the fans with at look at what potentially lies ahead. It's necessary, too.

Yes, the Sixers have a better chance to improve their draft position in the lottery. A sampling of the Embiid-Simmons duo is a must.

When healthy, Embiid has been a major force while performing at an All-Star level, even if he wasn't picked.

"There's no conspiracy theory going on," Sixers coach Brett Brown said of Embiid's bone bruise. "I believe we're going to see him not too far away. … It's not 110 percent and anything short of that we're not gonna do it."

The waiting, and waiting, and waiting is the hardest part. GETTY IMAGES

Simmons has been visible with his teammates and learning as much as possible. Until he gets on the court, fans will continue to wonder.

"We got back from Detroit really late two nights ago and got up yesterday and had Joel and Ben in my office for 45 minutes or so just talking with them," Brown said. "Twenty minutes after that, went out onto the court and worked Joel out. I won't [offer a timetable for Simmons] because we don't really have one. But it's moving forward."

Missing two full seasons and then showing All-Star ability has this fan base buzzing. Fans are clamoring for Simmons and Embiid. It's evident by the sheer number of jerseys around the arena.

"It is taking so long because we are just erring, we will err on extreme caution," Brown said. "Joel is as good a fighter as I've coached in regards to challenging everybody. Look at his body language when somebody says, 'You can't go in in the overtime game.' He is a competitive, competitive, highly skilled young player. So that side of it factors into all of this, too. But it shouldn't be read into or assumed something is wrong because it isn't. Everybody understands I think, we've heard it so much over the years, that we're just moving slowly and trying to move wisely."

Being patient is completely understandable. It's time to move. The wait is over. This is year four of the Brown era. The young stars need to play.

6 Free agent wide receivers who are good fits for the Eagles

The Eagles' two biggest areas of need are wide receiver and cornerback. Conventional logic and recent history suggest that Philly focus on the draft for their secondary, and spend whatever free agent cash they can muster on a wide receiver — a position they've had relative success with on the free agent market.

There are a number of very attractive names in free agency, but there are two specific things Philly is looking for in their next ace wideout (to pair with Jordan Matthews, who is clearly a No. 2). They need a downfield-threat who is affordable.

Here's a look at six wideouts we've pinpointed of interest to the Eagles this offseason, when the free agent signing period begins in March:

Pierre Garcon and/or DeSean Jackson could be available next month. GETTY IMAGES

1. Alshon Jeffery
(2016: 821 yards, 15.8 yards per catch, 2 TD)
Jeffery is the biggest name, and would have the biggest impact on the Eagles. He is just 26 years old and, if healthy, he's a Pro Bowl-caliber wideout who can give Carson Wentz a talented 6-foot-3 target. Spotrac estimates his open market value to be around $14 million a season. Can Philly dedicate that much money to one wide receiver? He is a doubtful addition, but with salary cap guru Howie Roseman calling the shots you never know.

2. DeSean Jackson
(2016: 1,005 yards, 17.9 yards per catch, 4 TD)
There have been many a rumor about a possible return of D-Jax to the city that made him a star, and the man himself has admitted he would be open to returning, but Jackson is 30 now. Is he worth the high salary demand he will no doubt be seeking? Would he take a hometown discount?

3. Pierre Garcon
(2016: 1,041 yards, 13.2 yards per catch, 3 TD)
It is highly doubtful that Washington will be able to re-sign both Jackson and Garcon — as the team has other concerns with its free agent cash. If Garcon is the player left available, the 30-year-old would fetch near the $8 million mark in free agency.

4. Kenny Britt
(2016: 1,002 yards, 14.7 yards per catch, 5 TD)
Britt is 28-years-old and as his numbers indicate he can spread the field. The Rams have a number of issues to worry about and wide receiver may not be a priority. His salary expectation, in the $6 million range according to Spotrac, will be in the Eagles wheelhouse.

5. Kenny Stills
(2016: 726 yards 17.3 yards per catch, 9 TD)
Stills is among the best down-the-field guys available and made just under $600,000 last season. At 24-years-old he's due a big raise, and the market could pay him upwards of $9 million. A little pricey, but a better value than perhaps Jeffery or Jackson.

6. Terrelle Pryor
(2016: 1,007 yards, 13.1 yards per catch, 4 TD)
The Browns have cash and very little to lose by bringing Pryor back, who earned just over $1.6 million during a breakout year in 2016. The 27-year-old will be looking for a considerable raise next year, upwards of $8 million per season. EVAN MACY

Owls open 2017 on road vs. Notre Dame

Temple expects yet another successful season in 2017. GETTY IMAGES

The Temple football team looks to keep its momentum going after back-to-back bowl appearances and program best seasons as they release the slate of games for their 2017 campaign.

The Owls will open the season on Sept. 2 at Notre Dame on ESPN, looking for their first-ever win against the Irish. ND was nearly upset two seasons ago when they visited the Linc (on a weekend when ESPN's "College Gameday" was in town) and many players from that loss remain — looking for revenge.

New head coach Geoff Collins wasn't with the Owls then, but is excited for his team's national exposure. Temple will play at least four games on national television in 2017.

"What a great time to be an Owl," said Collins. "Whether on the road and on national television, or at Lincoln Financial Field against some of the best in college football, Temple is now recognized as a top 25 program. People will watch us play and see championship football every play — from snap to whistle."

Away games against USF (ESPN) and Cincinnati (ESPN2) as well as at home against Navy (ESPN or ESPN2) will be national broadcasts. Other home games include Villanova, UMass, Houston, UConn and UCF.

The Owls other opponents in 2017 are East Carolina, Army and Tulsa, all on the road. EVAN MACY

Aries Get involved in something that will help your community. The experience you gain will encourage you to head in a direction that is satisfying as well as profitable.

Taurus You'll gain the most if you work quietly on your own. Don't discuss your plans until you are sure you have everything in place. Say less and do more.

Gemini Put home, family and personal concerns first. Love and self-improvement projects are all highlighted. Serious talks will add balance to important relationships.

Cancer Find a way to help others. Your generous spirit will help alleviate stress as well as protect your reputation from someone trying to make you look bad.

Leo Put your heart and soul into something you love doing in order to find a way to earn a little extra cash. Physical activity will give you a sense of accomplishment.

Virgo Check out the job market or look for upcoming openings at your current place of employment. Build good relationships with your peers.

Libra If you share the workload, you will form an alliance with people you can count on in the future. Romance will bring about favorable personal changes.

Scorpio Problems will arise if you get into an emotional debate with someone who doesn't have the same beliefs or concerns as you. Be cautious while traveling.

Sagittarius Invest in something that will lead to financial benefits. Explore opportunities that will allow you to use your skills in ways you hadn't considered in the past.

Capricorn Don't step into the spotlight. You are best off gathering information, not sharing your personal agenda. Secrecy and taking your time are all in your best interest.

Aquarius Take pride in doing the best you can. Bring about mental and physical changes that will encourage you to take action. Be a trendsetter, not a follower.

Pisces Hard work, discipline and balance will be required if you want to achieve what you set out to do. Realistic ideas and expectations will be necessary. EUGENIA LAST
